International Competitiveness of Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises: Peru, a Latin-American Emerging Market

ABSTRACT: Our research studies the international competitiveness of small- and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in an emerging Latin-American country. Using a sample of 100 SMEs in Peru, we find that firms compete abroad with standardized products, which are conditioned by the host-country markets, human capital, and industry cooperation. However, the results show that the age and size of the firm are not determining factors in competing overseas. Our findings open a new agenda for policymakers when interpreting how they should promote and support Latin-American SMEs.

KEY WORDS: emerging country, firm competitiveness, industry cooperation, Latin America, local/international environment, Peru, SMEs, standardized products

Many researchers have studied the international competitiveness of enterprises (Cho, Leem, and Shin 2008; Coviello, Pervez, and Martin 1998; Elenum 2007; Fahy 2002; Moon and Lee 2004). The vast majority of these studies have been carried out in highly industrialized countries (e.g., Japan, the USA, the UK, and Germany). However, very few studies have been conducted with a research focus on the economies of developing countries, such as those in Latin America. Numerous authors have suggested that research based on developed or highly industrialized countries cannot necessarily be applied to emerging countries (Cuervo-Cazurra, Martin de Holan, and Sanz 2014; Peña-Vinces and Urbano 2014) as the economic situation of such countries is rather different, and many of them are undergoing consolidation (Casanova and Kassum 2014; Peña-Vinces, Cepeda, and Chin 2012; Peña-Vinces and Delgado-Marquez 2013). There has been a recent increase in research considering multinational enterprises (MNEs) located in Latin America as a topic of study (Cuervo-Cazurra 2008; Cuervo-Cazurra, Martin de Holan, and Sanz 2014; Peña-Vinces, Cepeda, and Chin 2012; Peña-Vinces and Delgado-Márquez 2013). Previous studies carried out with a focus on Latin America have addressed aspects related to modes of entry, natural markets, natural resources, and value chains (Casanova 2009; Arze and Svensson 1997; Peña-Vinces, Cepeda, and Chin 2012; Peña-Vinces and Delgado-Márquez 2013; Sánchez-Chiappe and Poratelli 2011). However, such studies have not addressed the international competitiveness of small- and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs). In other words, they have not depicted a holistic view of how Latin-American SMEs compete in foreign markets. As some authors have
